The formation of classic styling develops and evolves over decades. Centuries even. A sofa may take only days to construct, but its foundation is built upon years of growth. The maple tree whose roots delved into the earth and whose branches reached to the sky for many summers, became the strength of that sofa. The ingenuity and experience of the capable hands that carefully crafted each piece of lumber and cut each piece of fabric, did not learn their trade overnight. The generations who taught and trained, dreamed and labored, can claim some small bit of ownership in each piece of upholstery built now.

The past is not alone in its right to inform and influence. Today matters too. New ideas and fresh perspectives should be embraced and incorporated. The home built now shelters and protects many moments. It fosters the growth of a new family. It enables gatherings of friends, children, and holiday festivities. It enriches life now. The upholstery built today must support this noble effort.

Once the past has been dutifully thanked and the present carefully considered, the future is owed its own bit of respect. Upholstery can be built to serve the future. Longevity can be engineered into each piece. The sofa built today can be there for future generations and enjoyed for many years. Embracing this perspective allows the cycle to continue. Past, present, and future.
